

This message is regarding the Indiana Telephone Privacy Law. It has come to my attention that the Consumer Bankers Association is attempting to impose the federal established business relationship exemption on Indiana consumers. While I am sure that the CBA considers the Indiana Telephone Privacy Law unfair because it keeps them from marketing goods and services to their existing customers, granting them an exemption defeats the purpose of the law. If the members of the CBA wish to communicate with their existing clients, there are other methods that are just as effective - and less intrusive - as phone calls.

I think it is safe to assume that the overwhelming majority of people who joined the Indiana no call list are opposed to the FCC granting exemptions to any entity, even if there is a pre-existing business relationship the entity and the individual.

I urge you to deny CBA's request for an exemption to the Indiana Telephone Privacy Law.
